

Elements dynasty

Chapter 3:- Path Beyond Earth

Akansh turned around. The old man stood behind him, smiling.

"Hi, Akansh. I'm Gaur. I wanted to talk to you." Before Akansh could reply, his phone suddenly rang.

He glanced at the screen. Harshit calling... Akansh looked at Gaur. "Just a moment. I'm getting a call."

He answered. "Hello?" Harshit's voice trembled. "Bro... What's happening to me? I don't know why, but that green stone keeps appearing in my mind... and there's a storm around me. The wind won't stop!" Akansh frowned.

"What are you talking about?" Before Harshit could say another word... Another call flashed on the screen.

Samar calling... Akansh answered the second call. "Samar?" Samar's voice was filled with confusion

"Akansh, I don't know what's happening! But that green stone keeps appearing in my mind... and I suddenly have unbelievable strength. I literally broke the front gate of my house just by touching it!" Akansh looked completely confused. "What the hell are you both talking about?" Harshit spoke through the call.

"Samar... same thing is happening to me. I think that green stone is connected to all of this."

The old man beside Akansh spoke. "He's right."

Akansh immediately turned toward him. "Who are you? And how do you know my name?"

The old man smiled. "My name is Gaur. And I'll explain everything to you but for now...." He looked at the phone in Akansh's hand. "First, tell them to sit down, relax, and take a deep breath. They need to calm their minds."

Akansh hesitated for a second, then repeated Gaur's words. "Harshit... just sit down, take a deep breath, and relax. Try to calm your mind." A few moments passed. Then Harshit's voice became steady. "Bro... it's working. The storm is disappearing." The howling wind around him slowly faded. Samar's voice came through the phone.

"Akansh... are you sure that green stone was just a normal stone?" Before Akansh could answer, Gaur spoke.

"No. It wasn't." Akansh turned toward him. He stared at the old man.

then spoke into the phone. "Harshit... Samar... I'll call you back later." "Okay," they replied.

Akansh ended the call and slipped his phone back into his pocket. His eyes never left the old man.

"Now tell me..." He took a step closer. "Who are you, really?"

Gaur smiled. "I already told you twice. But alright..." He extended his hand. "I'm Gaur."

Akansh frowned. "I know you told me your name... but I mean, how do you know my name? And how do you know about the stone?" Gaur looked at him with a smile

"I know everything, about that stone, about that box and about everything connected to it."

Akansh stood frozen. He had hundreds of questions, but before he could ask another one,

Gaur spoke again. "It's getting late. Tomorrow, at two in the afternoon, bring everyone who touched that stone here. I'll answer every question you have." Gaur turned around and began walking away. Within moments

The darkness of the night swallowed his figure. Akansh remained standing there holding more questions than answers. Akansh stood there for a few more seconds, staring at the place where Gaur had disappeared.

"What... just happened?" he whispered to himself. He took out his phone and called Harshit.

Harshit answered almost immediately. "Yes, bro?" "Are you okay?" Akansh asked.

"What were you trying to tell me before?" Harshit took a deep breath. "Yeah... I'm okay now. But I don't know why. Ever since you brought that green stone to college, it keeps appearing in my mind. It's like... it's trying to show me something." he paused for a few seconds. "It felt like the air was alive." Akansh remained silent.

"The fan above me was spinning, but I could actually feel the air moving around me in a different way. almost like I could control it. So... I moved my hand through the air..." Harshit swallowed nervously.

"And boom. A storm suddenly formed inside my room. Blankets flew everywhere, comic books and pages started floating, and everything around me was caught in the wind. I got scared and called you. Then you told me to calm down and relax..." A small sigh escaped him. "Then everything slowly returned to normal."

There was a moment of silence. Then Harshit spoke again. "Bro... that stone is definitely not normal."

Akansh looked toward the dark road where Gaur had walked away.

"Yeah..." he said. "I think so too. Tomorrow, come to my house with Samar at two o'clock. I'll tell you everything I know. About that stone" Harshit's voice became quieter. "Bro... I'm a little scared." Akansh smiled reassuringly.

"Don't be. Just wait until tomorrow." Silence filled the call. Finally, Akansh broke it.

"Okay take care... and don't try to use that power again. Meet me tomorrow with Samar."

"Okay, bro." The call ended. As Akansh lowered his phone, he suddenly remembered something.

His thumb hovered over Neha's contact, but after a brief pause, he dialed Ahaana instead.

After a few rings, she answered. "Hello?" "Hi, Ahaana. It's Akansh. Are you okay?"

She sounded confused. "Yeah... I'm fine. But why are you asking?"

Akansh hesitated for a moment. "You remember that green stone I brought to college?"

Elements dynasty

"Yes, that stone," Ahaana replied, "Akansh... that stone isn't normal. I don't know why, but I just can't stop thinking about it." Akansh immediately asked, "Can you feel the air in a different way?" There was a brief silence.

"No... the air feels normal." She paused. "But sometimes I can feel the space around me."

Akansh frowned. "The space?" "Yeah. It's strange... I can't explain it. It's almost as if I could control it." Akansh nodded to himself. "I knew it..." he whispered. Then he spoke into the phone. "Listen carefully. If anything unusual happens, don't panic. Just sit down, take deep breaths, and stay calm. And call Neha and tell her the same thing. Then tomorrow, meet me at my house at one in the afternoon. I'll explain everything to you." Ahaana remained silent for a moment before replying, "Okay... I'll be there." "Take care." The call ended. Akansh put his phone back into his pocket. His mind was overflowing with questions. The mysterious box. The green stone. Gaur. Harshit's storm... Samar's incredible strength. Ahaana's connection to space. None of it made sense. He returned home.

That night, sleep came late. As he lay staring at the ceiling, the same question echoed in his mind again and again. "What exactly did I open?" Eventually, exhaustion overcame his thoughts, and he slowly drifted to sleep.

Tomorrow.... His life was about to change forever.

The next morning, Akansh woke up after barely sleeping the previous night. He reached for his phone and glanced at the screen. 9:00 AM Tuesday. He sighed and pulled the blanket over his head, hoping to get a little more sleep. But it was impossible. Gaur's words kept echoing in his mind. "Tomorrow, at exactly 2:00 PM. Bring everyone to the park." "Akansh! Wake up! It's already nine!" his father's voice called from the kitchen. Akansh replied lazily, "Yeah, I'm alive" "Good. Now come downstairs and have breakfast with us!" After freshening up, Akansh walked downstairs.

As soon as he entered the kitchen, the aroma of freshly made omelets filled the room. His father stood near the stove, preparing breakfast, while his mother sat at the dining table, typing something on her laptop. Akansh took the seat opposite her. His father walked over, closed the laptop, and said with a smile, "Honey, breakfast first. Work can wait." He placed the plates on the table.

Akansh looked at his father. "Wow... Dad's making breakfast today? Is there something special?"

His mother gave him a mildly annoyed look. "According to your father... apparently not."

His father immediately realized what she meant. "Sorry, honey. I promise I'll never forget this day again."

She folded her arms. "Too late. You already did. No more apologies." Akansh looked between them, completely confused. "Forgot what? Today isn't your anniversary... So what's special about today?"

His father pulled out a chair and sat beside his mother. With a satisfied smile, he said,

"Today is the day I proposed to your mom." Akansh blinked. "Wait, you proposed on Independence Day? Seriously?"

His father laughed. "That's a long story, son. But before I tell it... any ideas on how I can calm your mom down?"

Akansh's mother looked at both of them before smiling. "You two don't have to worry. I already have a plan."

His father looked relieved. "Finally! You're smiling again. So, tell me your plan. Whatever it is, I'll make it happen today." She smiled mischievously.

"Simple. We're going out today, and you'll pay for everything I want. The entire day. Consider it your punishment."

His father's smile instantly disappeared. "What? The... whole day?" Akansh burst into laughter.

"Dad... you're finished today." His mother nodded proudly. "Yes, you are." His father sighed dramatically before adding, "Well... at least you're not angry anymore. I guess that's worth it."

Akansh looked at his father with a puzzled expression.

"But wait... you proposed on Independence Day? How?" His father smiled, as if the question had carried him back several years. "Well... that's because we met in the same college. Your mom was the topper, and I was..." He paused for a moment before chuckling. "Let's just say I was better at making friends than studying."

His mother couldn't help smiling. "He means he kept finding excuses to talk to me."

"Of course I did," his father admitted without the slightest embarrassment.

"It was Independence Day, after the flag ceremony, everyone would start heading home. As usual, I was waiting outside for your mom." He rested his elbows on the table, his eyes lost in the memory. "But that day, I saw her talking to another boy." A faint smile appeared on his face as he shook his head.

"I got a little jealous. He was a topper too... the kind of boy your mom's friends thought she deserved."

His mother laughed softly. "Then I noticed him standing there, looking upset." His father pointed at her with a grin.

"She walked straight over to me and asked, 'Why are you creating so much drama?' She had no idea what was going on inside my head." Everyone at the table smiled. "By the end of the day," he continued, "after all that unnecessary drama, I finally gathered the courage to tell her how I felt." His mother folded her arms and looked at him teasingly.

"And years later... this great romantic hero forgot the date he proposed." Akansh laughed. "Wow, Dad."

His father scratched the back of his head awkwardly.

"I know... I know." He laughed. "That was probably my biggest mistake."

Elements dynasty

Just as the laughter began to settle, the smell of the omelet reminded Akansh's father that breakfast was still on the stove. "One second," he said, turning back toward the kitchen. Before he could reach the stove, his phone, lying on the dining table, began to ring. The screen lit up. Restaurant Calling... His father froze for a split second.

Before he could grab it, Akansh's mother casually picked up the phone. She tapped the speaker button. "Hello?" A polite voice came from the other end. "Good morning, sir. This is just a reminder that your table reservation for today at 2:00 PM has been confirmed. We look forward to welcoming you."

The moment the words left the speaker, Akansh's father rushed over in panic. "Wait!" He called.

But it was too late. His mother slowly lowered the phone and looked at him with an expression that was impossible to read. "So... you didn't forget after all." He stopped, scratched the back of his head, and smiled sheepishly. "I was trying to surprise you, but now..." After a brief moment, her expression softened.

A warm smile appeared on her face. "I guess you've been planning this since morning. Well played."

Akansh leaned back in his chair and laughed. "I really thought Dad was in trouble."

"So did I," his father admitted, laughing along. "Looks like the restaurant almost ruined the surprise."

The three of them shared one last laugh before breakfast finally came to an end.

A few minutes later, his parents got ready to leave. His father picked up the car keys while his mother grabbed her handbag. "We'll be back in the evening," his father said. "And don't forget to lock the door if you go anywhere," his mother added. Akansh nodded. "I won't." After waving goodbye, he stood at the doorway and watched their car disappear down the street. The cheerful voices faded. The house became quiet. For a few long seconds, nothing moved. Akansh closed the door behind him and glanced at the wall clock. 12:48 PM

His smile faded as his thoughts drifted back to Gaur and that by two o'clock in the afternoon he and his friends....

The silence in the house didn't last long. Ding dong. Akansh walked to the door and opened it.

Standing outside were Samar and Harshit. Harshit spoke the moment he saw him. "Bro! I barely slept last night. I've been thinking about that storm and that weird stone ever since...."

Akansh rolled his eyes. "I know, me too. Just come inside, let's talk about it."

Harshit stepped in, looking around curiously. "Then why couldn't you tell us on the phone?"

Before Akansh could answer, Samar spoke.

"If he asked us to come here instead of explaining it over a call, there must be a reason." Akansh nodded. "Exactly."

When they entered Akansh's room, Akansh walked toward the table and picked up the mysterious black box with the red circles. He hesitated for a moment. The memory of Sunday flashed through his mind. It didn't open in front of Mom and Dad. What if it doesn't open now either? Harshit frowned. "Bro... what's wrong?" Akansh looked at the box, took a deep breath, and pressed his Right hand on it. Click. The box opened.

Akansh let out a quiet sigh of relief.

The green stone rested inside, glowing with a green light. Harshit and Samar stared at it in complete silence.

"Bro this stone..." Harshit whispered. Before Akansh could answer Ding dong....

Akansh opened the door once again. This time, Ahaana and Neha stood outside.

Neha looked at Akansh with folded arms. "Alright, we're here. Now can you finally tell us what's going on?" Ahaana didn't say a word. As she stepped inside the room, her eyes immediately fell on the green stone resting on the table. She stopped for a second. "It's glowing more than yesterday" Everyone turned toward the stone. The room fell silent.

Akansh looked around at all four of his friends.

Harshit looked confused. Neha looked impatient.

Ahaana couldn't take her eyes off the stone.

Samar stood quietly, waiting. Akansh took a deep breath. "Everyone... sit down."

He looked at each of them before continuing.

"What I'm about to tell you might sound impossible... but every word of it is true."

Before anyone could respond. The green stone began to glow brightly. Ahaana notices first. "Akansh, I think this stone..." Everyone turned. The room was filled with a glowing green light.

"Bro... what is happening?!" Harshit shouted.

Without thinking, he instinctively stepped in front of Ahaana, shielding her from the strange light.

Neha, startled, grabbed Akansh's arm. Samar looked around the room, searching for the source of the beam. Ahaana stood frozen, her eyes fixed on the glowing stone. Before anyone could move Flash.

Everyone disappeared from the room, only silence remained.

They all opened their eyes. For a brief moment, no one spoke. Neha suddenly realized she was gripping Akansh's arm. Embarrassed, she quickly let go and took a small step back. Harshit immediately turned back.

"Ahaana! Are you okay?" Ahaana nodded, still looking around in disbelief. "Y-Yes... I'm okay."

Elements dynasty

The ancient box rested in Ahaana's hands, as though nothing unusual had happened at all. Everyone looked around the room. It was unlike anything they had ever seen. Smooth metallic walls stretched in every direction, glowing with thin emerald-green lines that pulsed like veins beneath the surface. Strange transparent screens floated silently in the air, displaying symbols and maps in a language none of them could understand. The room was perfectly silent, except for a soft mechanical hum that seemed to come from the walls themselves. Neha frowned. "Weren't we just... in Akansh's room?" No one answered. Samar remained silent, carefully studying every corner of the room, searching for an explanation. Suddenly, a voice echoed throughout the chamber. "Welcome... Everyone." Everyone immediately turned toward the voice. Standing a few steps away was a man with a beard in unfamiliar clothes. Harshit, Neha, Akansh, and Ahaana instinctively stepped back. Samar moved half a step in front of the others. He wasn't attacking, but he was ready if he had to. Samar's eyes narrowed as he looked at the man. "Who are you?" That being walked toward them with steady steps. He looked at each of them. "I'm Gaur, and everything you've witnessed since yesterday... I'm here to explain it all." He paused. "The storm." Harshit turned toward him. "The impossible strength." Samar unconsciously looked at his own hands. "The strange connection to the stone." Ahaana turned toward him. "And the teleportation that brought you here. I'm not here to hurt you all" He paused before continuing. "I'm here to ask for your help." Akansh took a step forward "Gaur... you?" Harshit looked at him in shock. "Bro... you know him?" Akansh kept his eyes on Gaur. "I've only met him once. I only know his name." Akansh looked at Gaur. "Help? What do you mean? Yesterday you asked me to meet you in the park. But what is this place?" Gaur looked at him. "This..." He spread his arms. "...is my spaceship." For a second, complete silence filled the room. Then "WHAT!!?" All five shouted together. Harshit looked around again, trying to convince himself it was some kind of dream. Samar folded his arms.. "This has to be impossible." Gaur simply smiled. "ED." One voice said "Yes, Captain." Gaur replied "Reveal Earth's view." "Command accepted, captain." The glowing green lines spread rapidly across the walls. A second later, the solid metal dissolved into transparent crystal. Everyone froze. Beyond the glass stretched the endless darkness of space. Countless stars glittered like diamonds. Floating silently before them was a breathtaking blue planet. Earth. Behind it, the Moon drifted peacefully through the darkness. For several seconds, nobody spoke. Akansh walked toward the glass. His eyes widened. "Space...?" He placed a trembling hand against the transparent wall. "We were just sitting in my room..." His voice became barely a whisper. "How is this even possible?" Ahaana stared at the Earth. Harshit "This... this is actually Earth." Samar shook his head. "I don't understand" Gaur looked at them. "I know." He pointed toward a circular couch in the center of the room. "Please. Sit down. I promise every question will be answered." His calm voice slowly eased their fear. One by one, they walked over and sat down while Gaur was standing. Harshit looked around again. "One question first." Gaur nodded. "Go ahead." "Who is ED? I can hear her... but where is she?". A faint smile crossed Gaur's face. "ED..." He looked toward the empty space beside him. "...take human form." "Yes, captain." Tiny millions of microscopic nanoparticles suddenly appeared in the air. They gathered together, spinning faster and faster until they formed the shape of a young woman. Within seconds, a beautiful woman stood before them, dressed in a sleek white suit in green patterns. Her eyes shone with blue emerald light. She smiled. "Hello, everyone. My name is ED Elemental Deterministic. I am Captain Gaur's assistant, and I will be helping all of you." Harshit stared at her with his mouth open. "You're... a robot?" He blinked twice. "A really gorgeous robot." ED tilted her head slightly. "Thank you. According to the Earth's database, that is considered a compliment." Everyone except Samar laughed. Even Gaur couldn't hide a small smile. After a moment, his expression became serious again. "I brought you here because someone has discovered that the ancient box is on Earth." The room fell silent. "He could arrive at any moment." Akansh looked at him. "Who?" Gaur answered. "Kyro" The name echoed through the room. Akansh frowned. "And... who is Kyro?" Gaur looked toward them "He was once my greatest student." Everyone looked at him. "and my nephew." Harshit blinked. "Your... nephew?" Gaur nodded. "Yes."

Elements dynasty

"If you truly wish to understand Kyro, then you must first understand the world he came from."

"The Elements Dynasty." Neha frowned. "Dynasty?"

Gaur said, "Yes, There is a civilization spread across countless worlds, a place where knowledge is valued above everything else, and every piece of technology exists for only one purpose, to protect life. Across those worlds, billions of people proudly called the Elements Dynasty their home. Millions of magnificent libraries housed billions of books, preserving the history and mysteries of the universe. Its people lived in peace, never imagining that such a civilization could one day fall. I served there as a master in one of its great institutions, teaching the next generation. But... all it took was one person to bring that glorious era to an end." Gaur lowered his eyes for a moment before continuing. "Even after all these years... I still wait for the day the Elements Dynasty will rise again."

Neha looked puzzled. "Then... if it was so peaceful and powerful, how did it fall?"

For a brief moment, Gaur didn't answer. Instead, he walked toward the transparent wall. The reflection of Earth shimmered in his eyes. "Because even the greatest civilizations can fall... not when their enemies become stronger, but when the one who sits upon the throne is no longer the one making the decisions. Our King..."

He took a slow breath. "...my father" His eyes closed. "...was being manipulated by Yaen." Silence filled the room.

Samar spoke. "Then who is Yaen? And you mentioned Kyro. how does it connect?" Gaur nodded.

"Long before the universe existed... there was only darkness. Not empty darkness but a darkness that possessed its own consciousness." He paused. "That consciousness was known by one name, Yaen." Silence filled the room.

"The Unity Box protected the Elements Dynasty from his influence but the day it disappeared..."

Yaen finally found a way in. Yaen cannot force his way into a person's mind. He waits until he finds emptiness...

loneliness... grief... or hatred. Then he whispers and slowly... those thoughts are no longer your own."

Harshit frowned. "Wait... if that box protected your entire Dynasty... then how did it disappear?"

Gaur looked at the ancient box resting on Ahaana's hands. A faint smile appeared on his face, as though an old memory had returned. "Because of my brother-in-law, Vaeron. "Akansh blinked. "Kyro's father?" Gaur nodded. "Yes."

"Before he became Lyra's husband... he was known throughout his world as a thief."

Harshit couldn't help but smile. "A thief became a prince?" A faint chuckle escaped Gaur.

"Life often writes stranger stories than imagination." His expression soon became serious again.

"Vaeron never stole for himself. His people were starving. His world was suffering because. They were outside of the dynasty's reach, while our dynasty possessed more wealth than anyone could ever need.

One night... he secretly entered the royal palace, hoping to take something valuable enough to save his people."

Neha listened carefully. "Did he know what the box was?"

"No. To him... it was simply a treasure." Gaur looked toward the stars.

"But Lyra discovered him before he could leave. The two fought inside the Unity Room. During that struggle..."

They both reached for the Unity Box. The moment both of their hands touched it the box awakened." A green light filled the room in Gaur's memory." In an instant, Vaeron and Lyra disappeared, and the Unity Box vanished with them. "Everyone sat speechless. Samar finally broke the silence.

"So... no one knew where it had gone?" Gaur shook his head. Not even us. For years, we searched every known world. But the Unity Box had chosen its own path." Gaur looked directly at Akansh.

"A path that would eventually lead it... to Earth." He paused. "But before that Lyra fell in love with Vaeron."

"WHAT!?" All five shouted together. Harshit blinked in disbelief. "How? They were enemies!"

Gaur smiled faintly, remembering the past. "At first... they were."

"When the Unity Box awakened, Lyra, Vaeron, and the Box were all separated and teleported to different worlds."

"For a long time, neither of them knew whether the other had survived. Years later, fate brought them together again."

"At first they fought. But by then, following Vaeron, Lyra had discovered the truth. Vaeron had never entered the palace out of greed. He stole only because his people were starving, and he believed that was the only way to save them." Gaur lowered his eyes. "Once she understood the burden he carried. She no longer saw a thief. She saw a man willing to sacrifice everything for his people. Eventually, after all those years, they fell in love"

His expression became serious again. "However... My father could never accept him. After many arguments..."

Lyra chose to leave. She left the Kingdom with Vaeron to begin a new life together."

Gaur paused. "For a while my father was simply a lonely king. He had lost his daughter and his pride."

His expression darkened. "And Yaen found his opportunity. He slowly poisoned my father's mind.

Day by day... the King I knew..." Pause "...the father I loved, began to disappear.

He began seeing enemies where there were none.

He declared war upon innocent civilizations. One of those civilizations was Vaeron's homeland.

He no longer saw his daughter. He saw only a traitor."

Elements dynasty

Neha lowered her eyes. "So... he killed them too?"

Gaur nodded. "Lyra and her husband, Vaeron." The room fell completely silent.

Harshit whispered, "What about Kyro?" Gaur looked toward the stars.

"He survived. Then ten years later... he returned, what happened, I don't know, because I was not in the dynasty at that time I was searching for a way to save my father. But when I returned, the great gates of the Dynasty were broken, bodies were lying on the ground, the river had turned red, and no one was alive. Everything was destroyed. The kingdom's flag was torn. I was a little scared, but I entered the kingdom. Inside, I saw Kyro sitting upon the King's throne with one foot resting upon my father's lifeless body." The room fell silent. Gaur's voice faded.

He looked away, his eyes fixed on the stars beyond the glass. His hands tightened for just a moment before slowly relaxing again. No one spoke. Neha quietly looked at him. "I'm... sorry." Harshit asked "Gaur, are you okay?"

Gaur gave a faint nod. "Thank you." He took a deep breath, as though forcing himself to leave the past behind.

Then, without waiting... Samar leaned forward. "So now what do we have to do?"

Gaur looked at each of them. "Kyro is searching for the five Element Stones. If he gathers them before we do...

...the fate of the universe will change forever." Akansh asked "Then... we're supposed to stop him?"

Gaur nodded. "Not just stop him. You must find the remaining Element Stones before he does."

He walked toward the giant window overlooking Earth. "Your journey no longer belongs to this planet."

"From this moment onward, the path before you lies beyond Earth." A green hologram of the galaxy appeared before them, countless stars and worlds glowing before their eyes. All five friends stared at it in silence.

Then, almost at the same time "We... have to leave Earth?" Gaur turned toward them with a gentle smile.

"Yes, my children..." He looked back at the endless galaxy. "The universe is waiting for you all."

Far beyond Earth, The cold wind swept across the silent graveyard. Rows of ancient stone graves stood beneath a dark sky. One man stood before a single grave Kyro. His expression was calm, almost unreadable. After a long silence, he spoke. "I freed you, Grandfather. May your soul finally find the peace that Yaen stole from you"

He lowered his head for a brief moment. Footsteps echoed behind him.

A soldier stopped several steps away and bowed. Kyro didn't turn "Sir, You were right. The Box has finally been opened by someone on C.G 0.7" A faint smile appeared on Kyro's face. "Yes, I already know." The soldier continued.

Master Gaur has already reached the bearer." Kyro looked toward the stars. "That's... something I didn't expect."

He thought for a moment. "Which Element has awakened?" "According to the energy signals... the green one."

Kyro smiled. Not proudly. Not mockingly. Almost... with relief.

"The Unity Stone... Then fate has chosen well." He turned away from the grave.

"Prepare my flagship." The soldier bowed. "At once, sir." Before leaving, Kyro looked back at the grave one last time.

"I'll finish what should have been finished long ago." Without another word... He walked toward the colossal emerald warship waiting in the distance. A pillar of blue light descended into the hangar. When it faded, Kyro stepped out without a word. The soldiers bowed as he passed, but he never slowed his pace. He walked through the silent corridors until he reached a quiet room. Inside,

Myra sat beside a window, calmly reading an ancient book.

She didn't even look up. Kyro walked over and sat beside her. For a moment, neither of them spoke.

Then he broke the silence. "My lady... The Unity Box has finally awakened." Myra closed the book. "Yes.

I already know." Kyro looked at her. "Master reached the bearer before I did." She nodded. "As expected."

Kyro noticed something unusual. Myra wasn't reading anymore. She was staring into nothing. "What is it?"

"What are you thinking about?" After a long silence, she answered. "The Keeper's Secret." Kyro froze.

He immediately stood up. "No. Please... Don't even think about it." His voice was no longer calm.

"I know the oath. But that oath was never meant for you." Myra smiled. "The oath exists for people like you, Kyro." He shook his head. "No. I'll find another way. As I always do." She looked at him with quiet confidence. "I know you will."

"That's why I believe in you." "But there is only one path left." Kyro slowly knelt before her. For the first time.

The feared conqueror looked helpless. "Please. Don't leave me again." Myra placed her hand on his head.

"You weren't alone when I found you. And you won't be alone after I'm gone." She smiled. "Finish it... from the roots."

She leaned closer. She whispered the Keeper's Secret into his ear. No one else heard it. Not even the silence.

Not even me. The moment the final word left her lips...

A deep blue glow spread across her body. The light slowly faded. Her hand slipped from Kyro's shoulder. The room became silent. Kyro caught her before she could fall. "Myra...?" No answer.

For the first time since the fall of the Elements Dynasty... A tear rolled down Kyro's face.

He gently closed her eyes. Then he stood. His expression was calm once again. But his eyes had changed forever.

He looked toward the endless stars. "Master..." A long silence followed "...Now, I have no choice anymore."